Bill and His Razor Prevailed Not Against Divine Inspiration

Jailer Earl Ripley of the city lockup appeared at the church services in the police courtroom yesterday carrying a razor—and thereby hangs a tale.

When called for services a majority of the prisoners hurried to the barred door, anxious for a moment of freedom. Not so, however, with William Martin, a hulking, two-fisted son of the endless road that leads once yearly from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

"Come on, Bill; a little touch of divine service for yours," admonished Jailer Ripley, as William slunk toward the rear of the jail with a lather cup and razor in his hand.

"Aw, watcher givin' us?" queried William, caressing his week-old beard sav-
